

Position Announcement
Middlesex School
Teacher of French

Middlesex School seeks a full-time French teacher beginning in the 2023-24 academic year. Responsibilities include teaching a range of courses from the French Department's core series and contributing to its upper-level elective courses. Native speaking ability is preferred. Compelling candidates will also bring a passion for teaching about the Francophone cultures and societies beyond that of la France métropolitaine or l'Hexagone. An eagerness to engage with colleagues over pedagogical and curricular matters are crucial qualities that the School seeks in candidates. While seasoned candidates with advanced degrees are desired, we also know that great teachers come to us from a variety of backgrounds.

As a residential school, Middlesex considers the work of faculty more broadly. When we are at our best, we are engaging with our students both in and out of the classroom. Applicants should be deeply committed to embracing and supporting the diversity of our student body and the full student experience. Faculty members at Middlesex can expect to be responsible for weekly evening/weekend supervisory duties and will be responsible for contributing to the life of the school through athletics and extracurricular activities. Please note that the academic week at Middlesex includes half-days on Wednesday and Saturdays. Competitive salary and benefits, including a strong professional development program, will be commensurate with qualifications and experience.

To pursue this position, submit materials as follows to careers@mxschool.edu: write French in the subject line and attach as a single pdf a cover letter expressing qualifications for the position and interest in Middlesex School, a current resume, and references. Materials will be accepted until the position is filled.

Middlesex School is committed to bringing together a diverse faculty, staff, and student body. We encourage candidates who represent the broad, diverse community to which we aspire.
